EC Ministers Agree On Spending Cuts

Marathon Talks Trim British Rebate, But Farm Subsidies Are Unchanged

The ministers, meeting for 28 consecutive hours, agreed on a $2-billion emergency budget to cover outlays for the rest of this year, officials said. They drafted a $22.5billion budget for next year. French officials said they defeated an attempt by Britain, the Neth-erlands and West Germany to cut farm spending in both budgets. Planned increases in spending for social and regional programs, were canceled. The programs are designed to ease the impact of record unemployment and a general

Also trimmed was a refund to Britain, which had been agreed upon at the Stuttgart summit meeting in June. The move drew an angry response from Britain. Britain's financial secretary in the Treasury, Nicholas Ridley, told reporters, "It is clear the community is at the very limit of its re-sources." He added, "It is having to face up to the reality that it must control agricultural spending."

Officials said the ministers, who were continuing meetings to com-plete technical details of the draft, had battled fiercely over the cuts. Funding was left at $2.5 billion for social and regional projects, vir-tually unchanged from the previous Greece's finance minister, Dimitrios Koulourianos, who led the talks, said farm spending was not cut because ministers found their legal obligations to farmers were inelastic.

A proposed refund to Britain in the 1983 package, which was intended to compensate for unex-pectedly high contributions to the EC budget in 1982, was scaled back to $220 million, about $55 million less than it was due, community officials said. British officials put the loss at $67 million.
In Paris, Britain's foreign secre-

Mr. Ridley accused his col-cagnes of treating Britain shabbily in reneging on the agreement. An official British government statement "deplored the decision," and added that Britain would fight to get the money reinstated.

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Panama and Venezuela, which have supported U.S. policy in Central America, say the Reagan administration's plan to conduct largescale military maneuvers there for the next five months is counterpro-

Their response was echoed in statements by several Democratic sidential candidates and members of Congress, who said the in-creased U.S. military presence would aggravate tensions when several Latin American nations are intensifying regional peacemaking

Reagan administration officials said the planned series of joint manuevers with the U.S.-backed government of Honduras and sea and air exercises off the coast of timidate the Sandinist regime of Nicaragua, slow the passage of arms to it from Cuba and demonstrate support for U.S. allies in the

But Panama's foreign minister, Juan José Amado, said Thursday that the exercises would "cause concern and tension" and would hinder the attempts at regional negotiations by the Contadora group. Named for the Panamanian island where the group first met in January, the group consists of Panama, Venezuela, Mexico and Colombia.

Mr. Amado also said his government would not permit the United States to conduct maneuvers from its bases in Panama. A Pentagon official said those bases probably would not have been used anyway.

Kohl Seeks Review of 'Walk-in-Woods' Arms Plan

By William Drozdiak Washington Past Service

During a break in negotiations that lasted 28 hours, Nicholas Ridley, a British finance official, gave a progress report Friday on funding cuts for the European Community.

BONN - Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany has urged that Soviet and U.S. negotiators at Geneva examine again the controversial "walk in the woods" proposal, which would establish a balance of intermediate-range missiles in Europe and rule out deployment of the Persing-2 missiles that could strike Soviet territory from West Germany in less than 10 min-

In the first extended interview since his trip to Moscow two weeks ago, Mr. Kohl stopped short Tuesday of a full endorsement of the negotiating proposal, which both Washington and Moscow rejected after it was discussed informally at the Geneva talks. But he did stress that "all possible solutions" should be explored, including that plan.

The plan was suggested last summer by the U.S. negotiator, Paul H. Nitze, and his Soviet counterpart, Yuli A. Kvitsinsky, after a walk in the woods near Geneva. The plan would limit the United States to 75 cruise missile lannchers and the Russians to 75 triple-warhead SS-20s. In so doing, the United States would have dropped deployment of the 108 Pershing-2 missiles scheduled for deployment in West Ger-

Some Solidarity Activists Are Released

WARSAW - Several dozen Solidarity activists were freed from jails near Gdansk Friday at the start of the regime's amnesty proman Catholic Church spokesmen

"They seemed to be beaming with optimism," said the Rev. Henryk Jankowski, a friend of Lech Walesa, the Solidarity leader, and the founder of a prisoners' aid center in Gdansk.

A group of about 30 people, both men and women, have already arrived." Father Jankowski said in a telephone interview.

The amnesty decree, which took effect Friday, was a major part of ist government's plan to lift martial law. The end of mar-tial law coincided with the national day, the anniversary of the first

There were no outward signs that restrictions had been lifted in Warsaw, where the streets were almost deserted as always on national day, which is a holiday. Several hundred people watched a military ceremomy at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in the central Victory

Officials had said earlier they expected that no one would be re-leased before Saturday. Prison spokesmen in Gdansk could not be reached for comment.

A senior Justice Ministry official said about 800 people under investigation or sentenced for political offenses would fall under the terms of the limited amnesty, but 60 of 190 actually serving sentences would not be freed now.

Seven top Solidarity officials and five members of the dissident movement KOR, considered the most important political prisoners now being held, are not eligible because they are charged with crimes against the state.

Mr. Walesa said he would consult other union figures before deciding how to respond to the condi-tional amnesty. He said, however, that it was still necessary "to fight for our rights through peaceful methods," and "find ways to implement the August 1980 accords."

Those agreements established the right to independent unions and gave workers a greater leverage over the authorities. Their impor-

Poland's New Regulations

WARSAW - The provisional regulations passed by the Polish parliament Thursday will:

 Allow factory managers to order employees to do extra Work up to 46 hours a week.

• Give managers the right to require a six-month notice for joh changes by employees. This is a way of preventing a possible increase in resignations or job-switching that was blocked under martial law. Forbid enterprises to award new material benefits to workers.

· Empower the government to freeze prices that producers charge distributors and to direct some firms to produce goods considered essential. These rules appear to run counter to the principles of the country's economic reform program aimed at giving individual enterprises greater autonomy.

• Curb the prerogatives of worker self-management councils by weakening the legal effect of formal protests from such bodies and by authorizing the suspension or dissolution of a council if it becomes a threat to "the legal order or the basic interests of

• Strengthen a recent law against those labeled "social parasites," by requiring such people—often former Solidarity activists dismissed from other jobs for political reasons - to join government work crews. Fines would be eliminated as a penalty. Expand the powers of cabinet ministers to suspend university mates, fire deans, rectors and directors of institutes, and dismiss faculty staff members. · Limit students to joining youth associations and organizations already sanctioned by authorities.

• Subject teachers and students to dismissal or expulsion for breaching public order or acting against "the interests of the People's Republic of Poland." Enable authorities to continue to forbid assemblies if officials consider such meetings "threats to public order."

· Permit authorities to dissolve the leadership boards of cultural associations. This avoids the more embarrassing option of dissolving the whole organization, and is a measure that appears directed specifically at the Polish Writers' Union, whose leadership has refused to submit to Communist Party demands for a purge of anti-Socialist elements.

• Postpone ontil at least 1986 the development of multiple unions in factories.

Dropped from the government's original draft of the bill, at the urging of Poland's Roman Catholic Church, were several proposed permanent legal changes. But these measures have been put on the parliament's agenda for consideration again next week.

Mr. Buiak said underground leaders, in hiding since December 1981, should not emerge until it was clear that they would not be threatened with jail if they pursued their union activities openly.

The government has left undear its plans for re-introducing unions at the factory level. In legislation passed Thursday it amended the labor law to enable pluralism to be put off until the end of 1985, or until the Council of State considers it appropriate.

The official PAP news agency stressed that the amnesty bill was "an unconditional act of clemen-

"All who avail themselves of it will have to prove in a short time that they have appreciated its im-portance and onderstand the mis-takes they have committed in the past," PAP said.

Those who are freed now will have the balance of their sentence added to any new punishment if they are caught repeating their of-fense within 30 months.

The wife of Bronislaw Geremek, a senior Solidarity adviser held since attending a meeting with other former union associates in May, said he was confident he would be freed. He is under investigative arrest on a relatively minor charge.

Friends of Janusz Onyszkiewicz, a former Solidarity spokesman de-tained after addressing a small meeting in April, said they believed he too could be released. But at least one of the four charges against him carries a maximum sentence of more than three years, so his release is not automatic.

South African Police, Students Clash

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) - Police fired warning shots when they clashed with hundreds of black schoolchildren throwing stones Friday in the township of Tembisa, 30 kilometers (18 miles) north of Johannesburg, according to witnesses and police. A police spokesman said the situation was quiet in the township after the students were dispersed by bursts from machine guns aimed at the ground in front of them. Police said the children threw stones after school administrators suspended four pupils Thursday for arriving late. A teacher was stabled in the hand and buttocks at the beginning of the disturbance, police said.

The clash followed two weeks of confrontations between black sta-dents and police in Soweto, a black township south of Johannesburg. Police have used tear gas on Soweto students on at least three occasions in the past 10 days to quell disturbances there.

U.S. Says Educator Was Held in Iran WASHINGTON (NYT) - David S. Dodge 2d, the acting president of American University of Beirut, was held for at least the last six months in Iran after being seized in Beirut by pro-Iraman Shiite Moslems on July 19, 1982, according to Resgan administration officials. States. While the White House has refused to give details of the release, administration officials said Thursday that the United States asked the Syrians for their help in securing his release from the Iranians.

U.S. officials said that it is believed that Mr. Dodge was seized by pro-

Iranian Shiite militants, members of the Amal Islamic Movement, and initially taken to Baalbeck, a town in the Bekaa Valley controlled by Syrian forces, but where about 350 Iranian Revolutionary Guards were also based. The Amal Islamic Movement is said to be closely linked to the Iranian intelligence service and to Syrian security forces.

U.S. Senate Leaders. To Shut Off Filibuster

WASHINGTON - Republican tion bill that it took up in mid-May, leaders and those senators opposed to the MX missile agreed Friday on a compromise to shot off a U.S. Senate filibuster and bring up a vote on the $200-billion defense bill by Tuesday.

The announcement by the majority leader, Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee, came less than an hour before a scheduled vote to force a limitation on the anti-MX filibuster that has taken up most of the Senate's time for 10 days.

Under the agreement, opponents of the MX missile will bring up separate amendments Monday to ban production and place restrictions on it, with two hours of dehate alloted for each amendment. A final vote on the bill must come no later than Tuesday night.
About 15 senators, led by Gary

Hart, Democrat of Colorado, have held up completion of the 1984 military authorization bill by de-manding prolonged debate on the Reagan administration's plan to place 100 MXs in underground si-los that now house Minuteman-3

MX supporters, confident that they will prevail comfortably when the issue finally comes to a Senate vote, have largely ignored the debate - a factor that has angered the missile's opponents.

House Ties Strings to MX George Lardner Jr. and Helen Dewar of The Washington Post reported earlier from Washington: An uneasy U.S. House of Representatives tied some strings on Thursday to the MX victory it anded President Ronald Reagan a day earlier, conditioning deploy-ment of the missile on further steps toward arms control.

The House on Thursday adopted provisions to reduce the number of MX missiles the administration can buy in the next fiscal year and to make their deployment, contingent on progress toward a smaller, sin-gle-warhead missile in the future.

The House disposed of all its MX issues Thursday afternoon, but could not complete action on the $187.8-billion defense authorizaand which it may not finish until September. Representative Les Aspin, Democrat of Wisconsin, a key broker of the plan that led to House approval of $2.5 billion in MX production funds Wednesday night, followed up Thursday with an amendment that sought to guarantee development of a small, mobile intercontinental ballistic missile. Mr. Reagan's bipartisan Commission on Strategic Forces recommended this spring that Congress let the MX gn forward, but that work be started on a single-warhead missile for the future, called Midgetman, which would be less threatening and might lead to an arms control agreement.

The House, which earlier had blocked the MX, accepted that compromise by a wide margin of bipartisan votes in May, but some members remained fearful that the Midgetman would never be buil once funds for the 10-warhead MX

Mr. Aspin's amendment, accepted reluctantly by House Republi-cans, would limit MX deployment to 10 notil a Midgetman prototype has been tested and then to 40 ontil the Midgetman has been flighttested and contracts signed for engineering development.

The House also approved an amendment Thursday by two Democratic members, Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and Norman D. Dicks of Washington, to cut the MX anthorization voted Wednesday night by more than $350 milbon and reduce the number of MX missiles procured in the coming year from 27 to 21.

The administration has pro-posed deployment of 100 MXs in the next several years, but Mr. Gore would like to limit this to 50.

He said that by his calculations, deployment of 100 MXs, in conjunction with other weapons, would give the United States a menacing first-strike capability. "Measureable movement on

Drug May Limit Alcohol's Effect

By Philip J. Hilts

WASHINGTON -- Scientists have discovered that a drug used to treat depression belps prevent the memory loss connected with drinking alcohole according to a report released Friday.

The drug is the first to show such a clear effect on buman memory and will "open whole new lines of research" into both memory and alcoholism, said Markku Linnoila of the National Institute of Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse, a co-anthor of the paper that will appear in Science magazine next

Researchers say the drug — an antidepressant made in Sweden called Zimelidine — may or may not lead to a substance that will reverse some effects of drinking. But they expect it to help them explore the brain system that controls memory deterioriation and other behavior, including violence, sometimes associated with alcoholism.

Researchers said that although the drug reversed memory deterioration while a person was drinking, it was not clear whether that kind of memory loss is the same as the long-term deterioration of memory in chronic alcoholics. In previous experiments with animals, the new

In experiments with 16 bumans, Edward Sellers and Claudio Naranjo of the Addiction Research Foundation in Toronto found a similar, but smaller, reduction in the motivation to drink. That finding ventually may be useful in treating alcoholism

Zimelidine, according to the current bypothesis, works by affecting an important natural chemical called serotonin, which is believed to help store memories chemically in the brain and acts as a mediator in other behavior. It is found at abnormally low levels in the brains of suicides and

In the new study, researchers put 10 volunteers through a battery of tests after giving them as much as six ounces of 90-proof alcohol and either a pill of Zimelidine or a placebo, a sugar pill,

Those who drank and had the placebo scored badly on memory tests as well as on tests of balance and visual tracking.

But those who were given Zimelidine with their alcohol performed 65 percent to 80 percent better than their counterparts on some memory tests, such as one requiring them to remember a list of words after hearing it only once. Balance and visual tracking remained poor.

CAIRO - Egypt has failed to its $2.1 billion military debt to the United States, financial sources

Egypt was supposed to pay $30.2 million on June 15, but no payment has been forthcoming. The reason for the delay was unclear Thursday. Neither Egyptian nor U.S. government officials would comment on the debt issue, But Egyptian officials have assured their American counterparts that Egypt would not default on its debt, and that the interest payments would be made, the sources

Nevertheless, U.S. officials in Cairo and Washington are said to be concerned that Egypt's delay in meeting its debt obligation, if protracted, could burt the country's credit rating and lead to political difficulties in Congress.

Egypt Misses Talks Stall Over Access U.S. Payment To Reagan Election Data for the Post Office and Civil Ser-

By Howard Kurtz Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Negotia-tions between the White House and a House subcommittee broke down after the administration said it would not provide complete access to Ronald Reagan's 1980 campaign files unless the panel also agreed to a full-scale inspection of President Jimmy Carter's campaign records.

On Thursday, Representative Donald J. Albosta, Democrat of Michigan, the panel chairman, called the offer unacceptable and said be may seek a meeting with Mr. Reagan - or a subpoena unless the administration changes its mind by Tuesday. Mr. Albosta said the administration had refused to modify its most recent offer, which would give the panel access only to documents deemed relevant by FBI agents who are inspecting the Reagan campaign files stored at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University.

Congressional Republicans quickly picked up on the suggestion of the White House counsel, Fred F. Fielding, that the Carter files be included in any broader inquiry, saying that anything less would amount to reviewing only half the 1980 campaign. "We are not going to be dictated to by the executive branch," replied Mr. Albosta, who appeared frus-trated after a week of fruitless negotiations. He said that while the subcommittee has looked at some

Mr. Albosta said.

An administration official said many of the restrictions were suggested by the White House, but that "the sticking point" remained subjecting the Carter files to simi-lar scrutiny. "If they want to go through all the files, then they're Carter documents, there are no allegations of wrongdoing in the Carter campaign that would warrant a look at one side of it," he said.

But the laws for legislative review, many passed over the vetoes of governors who consider them a form of meddling in executive matters, are expected to come under increasing court challenge because the Supreme Court ruled last month that Congress's legislative veto provisions, written into more than 200 federal laws, were onconstitutional. AOS, New Mexico - Saki Karavas doesn't pretend it would be a tradeoff; just an ex-change of good-will gestures. He would consider having D.H. Lawrence's paintings returned to the British if Britain would restore the Elgio Marbles to Greece. The problem is that the British once banned the Lawrence art and have shown no indination to return the marbles.

Karavas, a New York-born Greek-American who lives in New Mexico, owns 10 of Lawrence's paintings, which were banned in England in the 1920s along with his best-known book, "Lady Chatterly's Lover," for being too erotic.
For some time, Karavas has been thinking about giving his collection of Lawrence paintings, which he now values at about $1.5 million, to Greece. His idea for a three-way exchange with Britain was inspired by the cur-rent campaign of Melina Mer-couri, the Greek minister of culture, to recover the marble statues and frieze taken from the Parthenon by Lord Eigh and sold to the British Museum early last cenm-

Not many Lawrence paintings are known to exist. The author began to paint only in the last four years of his life. The University of Texas has two or three of the paintings, Lord Astor has one and Aldons Huxley had one but it was destroyed by fire, Karavas said. The hotel owner keeps the Lawrence paintings in his office, near the lobby, and charges $1 to see them.

The works are distinct for their above 37.75 degrees centigrade warm colors and sensuality. "The prompted the mayor and health Rape of the Sabine Women" is all breasts and buttocks. This, according to the biographer Keith Sagar, was the begin-ning of Lawrence's "nightmare": ill health, powerty and the rejection of his work. From this time he dreamed of an ideal community of hand-picked friends in the United States.

"America is more or less as expected, shove or be shoved, Lawrence wrote to a friend shortly after his arrival in New Mexico September 1922. "But it still has a bigness, a sense of space and a certain sense of rough freedom which I like."

After Lawrence and Frieda returned to London in 1923, he wrote to Thomas Seitzer, his pub-lisher, that be felt "like an animal in a trap." They went back to Taos the following year and again That winter Lawrence went to Festival of the City of London, the Goldsmiths' Company, in asso-ciation with the Vinters' Company, is mounting a splendid exhibition, "The Goldsmith and the Grape," tracing the history of silverware in the service of wine, at Goldsmiths Hall. The first part consists of his-torical vessels, from a two-handled cup dating from c. 2200 B.C., found near Troy, through secular and reli-gious plate of the medieval and Renaissance periods to Victorian silver corkscrews. Part 2 is of work by contemporary silversmiths.

In the early 1920s Vuillard made one of his celebrated intimist interiors with two women drinking coffee from large black cups — "Les Tasse Noires." The two women were the artist's longtime friend Misia Sert, wife of the Spanish painter Jose-Maria Sert, and her niece Mimi. Vaillard worked much from pencil sketches of detail. For this particular painting be made more than 100 drawings, all of which are now gathered with the finished painting to form one half

As the art historian Christopher White observed some years ago in an essay on Rembrandt as an eicher, "throughout his entire late work runs a new mood of sensious enjoyment in his activities as a printmaker." Since more than twothirds of the "Rembrandt Etchings" in this exhibition of some 250 images at Wylma Wayne Fine Art are of the later period, the viewer has the double pleasure of enjoying the works for their own sake, and sharing in the sensuous pleasures of their creator. Rembrandt's was a protean talent, and nowhere more in evidence than to the vast range of his prints, treating each image as he did, as an independent work of art demanding and receiving as much attention as the largest cell

For the season that ends Ang. 31, net sales worldwide will total more than £272.7 million ($459 million) — compared with £267.5 million ($417.3 million) for the 1981-82 season. Britain and Ireland account for £106.1 million ($162.38 million) against £98.8 million ($169.77 million) last season while New York leads with a total of $191.35 million (£125 million), remarkably close to last season's $195.1 million (£113.6 million).

In the fall, it looked as if Sotheby's was going to lose the battle to Chris-tie's. Its fourth-quarier turnover was a mere £36.5 million ($59.13 million), while its competitor register cord high for the quarter of £39 mil-lion ($62 million). Sotheby's spectac-ular comeback is a remarkable feat, which few observers would have been prepared to bet on Sotheby's can now forecast a £4-million profit for the year, as opposed to last year's £3-million loss. Given the fracas over the American takeover bid, which did not enhance Sotheby's image and confused many outsiders, this is even more remarkable.

New York's relative success is partly due to the $16.8-million Havemeyer sale of Impressionist masters May 18, usefully supplemented in the same session by a $20.4-million sale of Impressionist and Modern paintngs from various sources.

Several world records were chieved that day, the most impressive being the $3.74 million paid for Degas's pastel on monotype "L'At-tente." It is the world auction record for any impressionist painting, and while it might not hold as such if a truly major impressionist painting in oils should come up, it is almost sure to remain the record price for a pastel Impressionist or not, for some

It all seems wonderful. It is, as far as Sotheby's recovery of prestige is concerned. But from every other viewpoint, the tide of record prices holds as many dangers as promises of prosperity for anction houses.

These are paid by definition for works that leave all others far behind in their own category. Such works represent, numerically, a minimal fraction of what is sold. They have been disappearing from the market at an accelerated rate over the past few years. Once in museums, they do not get pumped back into the anction circuit. An economist unfamiliar with the specifics of the art market might argue that, as one too layer becomes eroded and eventually gets whisked out of the market altogether, the one under will get promoted as a substi-

Sure enough, there have been in-stances of what might be called "resales. Such was the case, in my view, of Renoir's portrait of a woman in the node, scated on the banks of a river, that sold for $2.75 million immediately after the Havemeyer sale. Technically speaking, it is an accom-plished work, displaying Renoit's skill at wielding the brush, but it can also be seen as a rather conventional study using all the tricks — the blurred streaks of color blending subject and environment, the much-repeated face seen three quarter with an ambiguous smile, and so on. This is hardly the Renoir that deserved to hold the world record for the artist in contrast, for example, to the previous satisfactory "substitutes so numerous, that some of the private buyers on whose wealth and opti-mism the top end of the market large-ly rests might be turned off.

Individual cases apart, it is possible to envisage the point where real "museum pieces" will become so

In short, the present situation, in which so much hinges on record-price works is anything but healthy. The problem of dwindling quantity and quality remains. It cannot just be, and is not, mechanically compensated by a corresponding rise of masterpicces — and the rest alike. There is much talk about the soating prices of great works of art but noth said about the proportionately astronomical prices of bad pieces. These have never been so high. While an indefinite, if slow, rise of the supremely beautiful and rare is theoretically conceivable, the same does not skull — that is, the heimet — raises apply to the bottom end. Max Ernst's Surrealism: Individuality and the Unconscious

By Michael Gibson

AINT-PAUL-DE-VENCE, France — How little we actually discover of Max Ernst in his own work! This is a situation that is all the more paradoxical at first sight since he was after all a Surrealist some say the Surrealist painter— and was consequently always pre-sumed to be artistically hovering at the frontier of the unconscious.

But the unconscious in this sense cannot be the nucleus of individnality. It must, rather, he a strange-ly impersonal region out of which the individuality grows, for Max Ernst's work, as a whole, strikes me as astonishingly impersonal. High-ly individual, naturally, but imper-

This impression comes from a visit to the Macght Foundation here, where more than 150 items of the artist's multifaceted work have been gathered from museums and private collections around the world, and the paintings, drawings, frottages, collages, assemblages and sculptures offer an excellent anorama of his achievement.

Ernst's alter ego in his painting was a bird (e.g. "Loplop, Superior of the Birds," 1928 — No. 43 in the catalog) and there is indeed ng birdlike about the man with his strong blue eyes, his beak-like nose and a certain brittle frailty red behind talent, wit and su-

Ernst did use his talent as a foil in his fencing match with the world, and what dazzles is often the flash of a swift-moving blade. Thus Leonerdo's statement that art is cosa men-

Leonardo, however, was speaking with an entirely different objective: artists in his day were comparable to craftsmen, socially inferior to intellectuals in a society with Plato-Ernst himself invoked Surrealist nist leanings. Leonardo's intention was quite simply to get more consideration for artists by asserting that they were intellectuals and not

This belief made things very tough for art, but the explored with appropriate techniques by artists, had the ment of giving art "respectability" in the perspective of the day. Not that society at large was much aware of any such notion; but the artists were and it no doubt helped them to come to terms with the sort of social objectivity invoked by the msts, and with that slighly different sort of objectivity of the pragmatic world in which they lived and in which people were reli-

What is rather curious, looking at the work of Max Ernst today, is that one is no longer as aware of the break with the past that the Surrealists were convinced they were imposing. This is the way time works on art, and a visitor today can quite easily look for affinities with art of the past, and even with prewar Symbolist art. Thus "Dark Forest and Bird" (No. 37) appears like a sea change of Böcklin's "Isle of the Dead," and one can also detect echoes of the Renaissance and of Classical antiquity in this or that painting. But there are those works that remain as vivid as an mexplained dream (in which the colors have the implausible oddity, the abstract incompatibility of dream colors) like "La Femme Chancelante," "La Joie de Vivre," "Fascinant Cyprès or, among the later works, "Le Jardin de la

A Deal With Nicaragua

What is a reasonable bargain that could promote stability and perhaps even peace in Central America? Here is one idea; Call off the dogs of war, insist on absolutely no military intervention across any border, ban the shipment of offensive weapons to all governments in the region, buy one-way tickets home for all foreign military advisers, reward respect for human rights and democratic elections, and encourage true reconciliation all around.

You may be forgiven for not realizing that this is precisely the plan the Reagan administration says it favors. It is the program proposed by Central America's democratic states at a meeting in Costa Rica last October. And in crucial respects it overlaps proposals just offered by Nicaragua and by the Contadora group of mediators comprising Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama.

This week, while the White House was cranking up Caribbean war games, Nicaragua was obviously hoping to take the wind out of U.S. sails. Its leftist rulers dropped their insistence on direct talks only with the United States and Headanas. States and Honduras, and came around to the U.S. view that meaningful talks to stabilize Central America have to be regionwide.

Yes, said the State Department, that is a "positive step." But where are Nicaragua's ideas for verifying progress within countries? Why was nothing said about letting democratic elections resolve internal problems? And how can Managua put the Salvadoran rebels on the same level as an elected government?

That is a weak and suspect U.S. response.

The plan the Reagan administration says it favors also treats both Salvadoran sides the same way: It would compel the recall of all foreign advisers. And the talk of elections cuts both ways: Who elected Guatemala's rightwing dictator? Verification? Sure, that's a subject for negotiations, not a precondition.

rect for negotiations, not a precondition.

The greatest awkwardness concerns military intervention. President Reagan has had trouble proving any significant Nicaraguan role in El Salvador. Yet U.S. support of rebels in Nicaragua is now blatant. The president justifies supporting the contras by comparing the Sandinists to the European Communist regimes kept in power by Soviet tanks. If that were the case, he should welcome Nicaragua's offer to send away its Cuban helpers along offer to send away its Cuban helpers along with all foreign advisers in the region.

The hostilities of years are not going to be dispelled by the semantic maneuvers of a few days. Plainly it would take a lot of string to make any such diplomatic package hold. But some promising ideas are now on the table, put there has allies as small as adventuring. there by allies as well as adversaries.

Those ideas call for something more considered than Mr. Reagan's remark that dealing with the Sandinists is difficult because "they're being subverted or directed by outside forces." Generously testing the sincerity of Nicaragua's overture would cost little.

Perhaps the Nicaragnans want to be more reasonable only because they are scared of the new Yankee belligerence. But isn't that what Mr. Reagan hoped for?

ning to expand rapidly last spring, but far more rapidly than had seemed possible a few months before. The growth rate reported this week by the Commerce Department for the spring quarter, a ringing 8.7 percent annually for the GNP, deserves to be taken as a sign of real strength in the cycle now beginning.

That will give hope to the many millions of people, by no means all Americans, who have suffered from this long and deep recession. Americans bear great responsibilities in the management of their economy. When it goes away, the greatest hardship fall on the poorer countries that move to its rhythm.

This surge of growth is being led entirely by a rapid increase in personal spending by private citizens. The money spent on personal consumption and invested in houses during the spring more than accounted for the leap in final sales. It is a conventional Keynesian response to the powerful stimulus of a very large federal budget deficit.

Amid all of the cheering, you will shortly begin to hear an undertone of concern about the unexpected speed that the recovery seems to be reaching. In a country with such recent and costly experience with inflation, the question of inflationary dangers will shortly come up. To put it bluntly: Should public policy begin to move to slow the recovery down a little for safety's sake?

It has already happened, in a very modest degree, with the slight tightening of the money supply by the Federal Reserve since mid-May.

Interest rates are already a little higher than they were in the spring, during the three months when that remarkable 8.7-percent rate was being achieved. The rise in the rates is not enough to chill the recovery, but it suffices to reassure everyone that the possibility of accel-crating inflation, however remote it might seem at the moment, does not go unnoticed.

Against this show of sudden strength, there are a couple of points of real weakness that need to be noted. Business investment is still very low — significantly lower, incidentally, than when Mr. Reagan took office. That is not hard to explain, since investment generally runs low in recessions, but it is a reminder that this recovery is not following the Reagan script. Even more serious, American exports dropped again during the spring. A strong recovery cannot be sustained for long unless growth quickly resumes abroad.

Athens and Washington

The map makes evident the importance of the new agreement between Athens and Wash ington to extend for at least five years the life. of American military bases in Greece. With Turkey, Greece is the eastern anchor of the North Atlantic alliance, with a strategic location of prime importance astride both the Adriatic and the Aegean. It has a common frontier with one Soviet nation, Bulgaria, and borders on Albania and Yngoslavia. And it offers important support facilities for the 6th Fleet and U.S. air operations as well as critical communication facilities.

Beyond its tactical and strategic elements, the agreement reinforces traditional ties between the two nations that were put to a rigorous test by the furious rhetoric that brought Andreas Papandreou to power almost two years ago. He still finds it necessary to distance himself from Washington, portraying the renewal of the agreement on bases as a formula to terminate them 17 months after the five-year agreement runs out. True, there are provisions for one party or the other to end the agreement with due notice after the extension has expired. How reassuring to think that the bases might no longer be required when that time comes. But how reassuring to perceive also the flexibility of the Greek prime minister, who has recognized the reality of today's situa-tion and put off the immediate termination that he threatened in the heat of the campaign.

Now Congress must weigh the level of arms aid proposed in the agreement. The $500 million in military credits offered for the next fiscal year, an increase of 79 percent, seems

Waging Economic Warfare

U.S. Shows Poor Judgment in Squeezing Managua

WaSHINGTON — The Reagan administration, perhaps more than previous administrations, has sought to deny other nations access to international commodity and capital markets in order to pressure them into complying with U.S. foreign pol-icy objectives. Yet economic sametions not only violate the rules that govern the international economy but also are usually harmful to U.S.

business and counterproductive to larger American foreign-policy goals. Nicaragus is the latest target of this economic warfare. The administration recently banned most of Nicaragua's sogar crop from U.S. mar-kets and, not for the first time, vetoed a small loan by the Inter-American Development Bank.

Economic sanctions against Nica-ragnz fit into a broader Reagan ad-ministration pattern. For example, the administration sought to penalize European companies for selling sup-plies for the natural-gas pipeline that will link Siberia to Western Europe. It has embargoed Libyan oil exports, pressured commercial banks not to lend to Cuba and lobbied multilateral financial institutions such as the World Bank to cut lending to Grenada. The trade and investment incentives in the proposed Caribbean Basin Initiative are confined to countries that fulfill designated political criteria.

President Reagan's ready resort to economic sticks motivated developing nations earlier this month to conemn "trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and economic sanctions" taken by industrial states against developing countries. The resolution, approved overwhelmingly at the UN Conference on Trade and Development held in Belgrade, was sparked by U.S. sanctions against Nicaragua. Economic warfare violates the rules or at least the spirit of a series of international and regional agree-ments. The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade was established after World War II to maintain an open world-trading system and to mini-mize commercial discrimination against states on political grounds. The charter of the Organization of American States declares definitively that "no state may sue or encourage the use of coercive measures of an economic or political character in order to force the sovereign will of another state." The drafters of the GATT and

OAS charters understood that if one state uses economic instruments for political purposes, other states might follow. The years between the wars had taught that such economic warfare increases international tensions and threatens the global economy. From a purely practical point of view, economic sanctions usually fail to accomplish their foreign-policy objectives, especially if they lack the support of other nations. Nicaragua has already found an alternative market for its sugar in Algeria. And, while it will miss the Inter-American Bank loan. Some Cautious Advice

And it could bring solid advan-tages for Central America, where moderates and rightists can never be sure which side really less Washing-Central America is a good one. The main concern about the United States in the rest of the world, friend and foe alike, is lack of continuity in ton's ear. At present, each can argue that despite public statements, it has the inside track and can offer facia its approach to foreign affairs.

Rebuilding the consensus that existed between World War II and the Vietnam War would serve U.S. interests and restore loss guidelines for measuring decisions. It would help remove the risk of impetuosity, such as the initial Rengan administration announcement that El Salvador was "the test of Soviet-American rein-

It would have obvious advantages for the administration now, reducing as a campaign issue the failures in Central America so far.

There are advantages for the Democrats. Walfiling congressional opposition reflects an underlying fear of a campaign on "Who Lost Salvador," fringer that are always with us.

So the question has to be which policy. When he announced the composition of the Kleninger commission, President Reagan made this appeal: "Help us want the American people that for the first time in memory, we face real dangers on our borders, that we must protect the safety and security of our people."

That is hardly an objective mandate. Is the president's memory so short that it does not include the 1962 Cuban missile crisis? What on certh in the present messy situation, involving civil war over local issues, compares with that clear-cut threat?

Obviously, Mr. Reagan decided on the commission approach because he fringes that are always with us.

A hipertisan policy would reparate

the mainstream from the noisy

the commission approach because he felt well-served by commissions on Social Security and the MX missile. But the Scowcroft MX recommends tion was an unfortunate precedent, a political trade-off that is going to be mormonsly costly.
In effect the commission, headed by General Brent Scowcroft, accept-ed one more gigantic, immediate arra-tegic error in return for making better sense in the longer term. It accepted the MX now, in contradiction of its own reasoning, because the president wanted it said cared most about another win in Congress. For that, he was willing to accept a long-range weapons policy shift to single-war-head missiles and a new promise to seek arms control.

According to some of his friends,
Henry Kissinger had careful negotiations with the administration before be accepted his surprising new ap-pointment. He had been considered, and rejected, for both the MX job and as special Middle East negotiator, subjects on which he has exper-tise — something he lacks on Control

The initial proposal was that the commission would advise on the proper running of the office of assistant secretary of state for Latin America, which meant getting involved in current issues. But the way Mr. Kissinger knows more about than any other is buteaucratic infighting, so be refused to deal with day-to-day operations from outside. Instead, he is to focus on medium-and long-term approaches.

What can that mean? Another compromise endorsing current mistakes in return for a distant vision? Central America is not just a highiced missile that can be stuck in a site and then thrown zway one day, when its use as a "bargaining chip"

What is done there now will determine what is possible laser, if the war continues to be spread now, it will be too late to turn back and say we should have negotiated a way out.

A bipartisan policy can only be useful if it brings a new focus on how to reduce fighting in Central America, not how to pursue the illusion of U.S. victory.

Mr. Kissinger, whose record brings him under attack from both left and right, will have a chance now to show that his analytic skills can be put to better use than in Chile, or Cambodia, or Angola. This time he is not a member of the administration. He does not have to serve an insecure president's partisan needs.

And if he and his group can come up with a constructive policy, not just scaremongering and saber-rating, they will get wide support. It it is more of the old hocus-pocus, it will be seen as the old hocus-pocus. Magic wears off. Results count.

ROME — A small bug is eating the heart out of Africa. It arrived somewhere in Zaire 10 years ago from South America; no one knows quite how. Its long-term impact on food production in Africa is far worse than the well-publicized

Droughts do not go on forever. But unless stopped by man's intervention, the mealybug will endlessly ravage the continent right across its tropical midbelt. It is attacking the foremost foodcrop of tropical Africa, cassava, favored by 200 million subsistence farmers and their families because it tolerates drought. Its underground tubers give high yields. Indeed, if the leaves are eaten too, the cassava is much more natritions than the other principal crops of Africa: maize, rice, millet and yam.

Every year, the mealybug advances another 300 miles. It is estimated by Dr. Ermond Hartmans, director of the International Institute of Tropical Agriculture in Ni-geria, that Nigeria alone lost $1.5 billion worth of its crop last year. The price of cassava has gone up fivefold in the last three years. According to Dr. Hartmans, a

An entomologist on vacation in Paragnay stumbled across it. This was two years ago. Since then, a number of major problems have had to be wrestled with. First, how to breed and release the predator in large enough quantities that it could be distributed over an area of Africa the size of the continental United States. This problem has now been resolved, in part by an Austrian and Swiss team designing a special high-speed plane with a mechanism for releasing the wasps. The resistance of a number of President Reagan's fence-sitting in the Taiwan Straits may be irritating to liberals like Mr. Solarz in Washington, but the fact remains that Mr. Reagan's policies and atti-tudes simply reflect the realities (namely that Taiwan is not a part of Communist China as Beijing incists) 2) Before Mr. Reagan took office, U.S. relations with China were riding on an artificial high. After a few injections of realism, they are coming down to carth. Instead of continuing to make graduated concessions to Beijing, the United States has decided, under Mr. Reagan, to draw the

3) Mr. Solarz would have us believe that the United States, if it wants to build confidence with Beijing, should make more concrete concessions white receiving only vague promises from Belling in return. Hasn't the United States made enough concersions to Beijing?

4) Mr. Solarz says the United States should keep its commitments to Beging. What about U.S. commitments to Taiwan? These are time-honored and are embedied in the Taiwan Relations Act, a U.S. law that should carry much more weight than any of the communiques the United States has signed with Communist

5) Finally, Mr. Solarz tries to resurrect the old belief that "the enemy of my enemy is my friend" and therefore China, despite being Communist, is a friend of the United States. This idea is bankropt, along with the idea of China's strategic importance to the United States.

Mr. Solarz is beating a lot of dead horses. The trend is toward facing reslities in U.S.-China policy. That's about all anyone should expect from the United States.

ECONOMIC SCENE

By LEONARD SILK

There is Legitimate Reason to Argue That the Fed's Policy Makes Sense

Neserve Board, was doing the advance billing at his confirmation hearing a week ago for the policy decisions just taken by the Federal Open Market Committee, he said, "I don't think you'll find those decisions terribly dramatic."

But the stock market this week found the committee's decisions not merely dramatic but breathtaking, exhibitrating, even thrilling. On Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrial average jumped more than 30 points, its biggest lesp since Nov. 30, when the economic recovery was just getting under way.

Although the market settled down to a flat but hectic pace Thursday, Wall Street is still reverberating with hosannas for the Fed's decision to swallow the 14 percent rate of growth of the basic money supply, called M-1, posted so far this year and to set easier formal targets of 5 percent to 9 percent for the second half.

The economic recovery is moving faster than expected, but it still has a long way to go.

Indeed, Mr. Volcker said the Fed would return next year to what had been its goal for this year: a 4 percent to 8 percent growth in M-1, which includes currency and checking account deposits. But the Fed has already demonstrated that it does not take such targets too seriously, when the economic environment suggests that it should not. Wall Street, in response to the Fed's policy of tiny-steps-for-tiny-tots on the road toward restraint, took a giant step

Was the market overreacting to the committee's policy of toddling slowly toward restraint or was Mr. Volcker underplaying it?

Minimising the News

Mr. Vokcker, minimizing the news, said the "limited, timely and potentially reversible actions" taken thus far by the Fed to curb the money supply and ease interest rates upward were "clearly preferable to the risks of permitting a situation to develop that would require much more abrupt and forceful action later." When asked if further tightening by the Fed was in store, be replied, "Not necessarily," which the market took to mean, "Not if I can help it."

This undoubtedly cheered hearts in the Reagan administration, which has been campaigning in public for an easier money policy and no sharp

Rooting for a monetary policy of tiny steps, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told the Joint Economic Committee that "small, firming steps" should be enough to "reduce the growth of the money supply gradually." In the past, Mr. Regan added, the Fed had sometimes acted too strongly, and the result had been a "credit crunch that damages the econor That must not be allowed to happen this time, the secretary said, "and we don't believe it will."

. The new emphoria on Wall Street looked like a correction of its earlier excesses on the side of gloom that had resulted from a widespread misreading of the degree of the Fed's tightening, and its intentions to tighten further. The market had seen the Fed as more monetarist than it has turned out to be; like the administration, it has become more freethinking, leaving monetarist dogme to others.

The market also seems to have overrrated the independence of the Fed and underrated the impact of administration pressures on the central bank not to tighten more than a little, Wall Street should consider using a new slogan: "When the White House talks, the Fed listens."

'Easy to Get Cynical'

While it is easy to get cynical about the Fed's new harmony with Mr. Reagan, whose eyes are on the 1984 election, there is legitimate reason to argue that the Fed's relaxed policy makes sense economically.

The economic recovery is moving faster than expected, with an 8.7 percent jump in real gross national product in the second quarter, but it still has a long result to a long result of the second quarter, but it still has a long way to go. Uncomboyment hangs at 10 percent of the civilian labor force. There is a good chance that, with the big swing in inventories over, the rate of growth of the economy will be more moderate in the second half. A jump in rates would clip the wings of intrestsensitive industries, like housing and autos. The international debt problem is still acute, and climbing interest rates would surjously aggra-

Inflation, a dark cloud, is still a good way off and the winds are not blowing strongly this way. Wall Street and the White House both seem willing to live with that risk—and to ignore the warnings of Mr. Volcker about the huge deficits and a "day of reckoning" when budget deficits will cut off the credit needed to support growth in the private economy. "Left unattended," he said, the budget situation remains the "most important single hazard to the sustained and balanced recovery we want." But significant action on that front seems improbable at least until after the election. The administration has quietly dropped the president's contingency tax plan, scheduled for 1985, with no resistance from interest rate pressures or the reverse in the period ahead - much will depend on other factors," Mr. Volcker said.

It is an approach now understood, if nnt totally accepted, by many analysts. David Jones, money market economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., noted that "the Fed is increasingly looking through its money supply targets to the level of interest rates and the condition of the economy.

Another thing that will guide the Fed, said Raymond Dalio, president of Bridewater Associates, a financial advisory firm in Wilton, Connecticut, will be the crises or near crises it encounters. "The Fed always steers away from the greatest immediate danger." In his view, with unemployment still high and inflation relatively anything that would cause the economic recovery to falter. For every voice saying that the new money supply targets reduce the chance of any increase in interest rates, there is another voice say-ing that higher rates are inevitable now that the economy is recovering at a bealthy pace. Economists seem to agree that there is no danger of a recognize that if the Fed continues to supply money to the economy at the rate of the first half, more inflation is inevitable.

When Congress decided in 1978 to require the Fed to announce its money supply targets twice a year, the idea was partly to impose discipaine on monetary policy by com-paring the Fed's actions with its own goals. Even though the Feder-al Reserve has exceeded its money supply growth targets more often than it has achieved them, the fact is that the targets have the atten-

West German GNP Growth in 1983 Expected to Be at Least 0.5 Percent

BONN (Reuters) — Real growth in the West German gross national product will be at least 0.5 percent in 1983, rising to 2.5 percent in 1984, Otto Schlecht, the state secretary for economics, predicted Friday. He said in an interview that growth of 0.5 percent is assured this year and that the figure could be higher. West German GNP declined by a real

1.1 percent in 1982. Mr. Schlecht said preliminary data show that GNP growth continued at a rate of 0.5 percent in the second quarter of 1983 after a 0.5-percent gain in the first quarter. A summer hall can be expected in the third quarter but the economy will move forward again in the final quarter, he The economics minister, Otto Lambsdorff, earlier predicted that growth will reach 0.5 percent in 1983. That was a more optimistic prediction than the zero-growth forecast contained in the government's annual economic report in January.

GAF said that it was also concerned that it might not be able to immediately distribute proceeds of the sale to its shareholders. Allied had agreed in April to buy the chemical business for about $410 million. Three weeks ago, GAF's agreement to sell its other principal business, its building products group, collapsed when Southwestern General Corp. withdrew its $140-million offer for the business. Southwestern General attributed the decision to the "uncertain status" of a proxy fight for control of GAF.

Finland to Pay More for Soviet Oil

HPLSINKI (Reuters) Finland is to pay more for Soviet crude oil, the state-owned importing company Neste said Friday without disclosing

Sources said, however, that the price would be $29.50 a barrel backdated to July 1. That would be an increase of 50 cents a barrel on the price Finland has been paying since May 1, the date on which the last Soviet price rise, also of half a dollar, took effect.

Finland is scheduled to buy about 56 million barrels of Soviet crude oil this year. A Neste representative said the company does not plan to pass the added cost immediately to consumers.

BOC to Sell Mountain Medical Stake LONDON (Reuters) - BOC Group said Friday that it had decided to some changes in October when sell its 52-percent stake in Mountain Medical Equipment and expects the Medicare, the government-sponsale to be made to either a corporate buyer or through a secondary sored health care program, begins offering of the stock to the public.

BOC, a major producer of industrial gases, will make the sale though its treatment rather than paying them

U.S. subsidiaries Airco Industries and Glasrock Medical Services. It said the decision to sell followed advice from investment bankers Drezel Burnham Lambert Inc.

A BOC spokesman said the cost to BOC of purchasing the stake was difficult to ascertain because it was acquired indirectly when BOC bought Airco and Glasrock, each of which holds 26 percent of Mount Medical. He declined to put a current value on the stake.

IBM Japan Sets Software Ventures

TOKYO (AP) - IBM Japan, a subsidiary of International Business Machines Corp., has set up two joint ventures with Japanese companies to develop computer software for the communications field, it was announced Friday.

U.S. Steps Up Trade Battle With EC With Plan for Dairy Sales to Egypt

By Hobart Rowen Washington Post Service

Mr. Dole, in his letter to Mr. Reagan, said the cost to the textile industry because of any increase in Chinese imports does not come close to matching the lost sales of farm products to China, which is the United States' biggest wheat buyer. Chinese textile sales to the United States last year amounted to $750 million, about three-fourths of the total wheat sales. THE BATTLE FOR THE FALKLANDS By Max Hastings and Simon Jenkins. 340 pp. W.W. Norton & Co, 500 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y. 10110.

Reviewed by Drew Middleton

BRITAIN'S campaign to retake the Falkland Islands from Argentina has spawned a number of books, most of which smack too strongly of instant history to be of lasting value. The honorable exception is "The Battle for the Falklands."

Although it was short in duration, the Falklands campaign - with its political overtones - was highly complex. The action ranged from the somawhat stagmant atmosphere of the United Nations to the gale-swept hills above Port Stanley, the islands' capital. The cast included the redoubtable and pro-Argentine Jeane Kirkpatrick, the United States arebassador to the United Nations, the no less redoubtable Alexander M. Haig, then secretary of state, and finally. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, who, greatly daring, won against beavy odds. She was lighting a war on islands more distant from England than Tokyo or Singapore with ground forces inferior in numbers to the Argentines. admirals, generals and air marshals - with their plans, their private fears and, in London's case at least, their resolution to carry the business through.

Far away, tormented by the long South Atlantic swells, were thousands of British troops and airmen preparing to land against numerically superior forces deployed in some of the worst battle terrain

This book probably will endure as the standard history of the campaign because of the happy com-bination of two authors, each a master in his field. Max Hastings, a former paratrooper and a re-porter for The London Evening Standard, provides military reportage of a high order. His accounts of the fighting are vivid. And he does not spare the British high command for its failures, such as the complete absence of communications between ship and shore and between Navy and Army at Fitzroy Bay, where the landing craft Galahad was sunk by Argentine bombers. Simon Jenkins, the political editor of The Economist, presents the political and diplomatic side of the campaign. It is a tribute to his skill as a reporter and as a writer that he makes the long, inconclusive and, on both sides, unsatisfactory early negotiations over the Falklands highly interesting and significant signposts pointing to the eventual trial by arms.

The book is especially good on Haig's role in the pre-combat negotiations. He is pictured as insisting that Britain give him room for maneuver since the United States could not have two allies at war. But. "More privately — especially in talks with Mrs.
Thatcher herself — he hinted that he had to talk icugh to impress the Argentinians and, it seemed, his own team as well."

The political-diplomatic fencing that led to combat evokes some of the authors' harshest criticism. One suspects that it was Jenkins who provided the judgment that the dispute led to hostilities and a compromise settlement was never achieved "because the British Foreign Office proved far more competent at negatiating with another government then with its own."

When hostilities did start, much of the world's attention focused on the air-sea battle with its meiancholy toll of ships lost: the Argentine cruiser General Belgrano, Britain's destroyer Sheffield and frigate Ardent, and others. But as this book brings out with admirable clarity, it was the commandos the paratroops and three regular infantry battalions that reconquered the Falklands for Britain.

What were the lessons on both sides? As far as the land operations are concerned, a Pentagon assessment included in the book said: The British operation vindicates totally the concept of a professional standing army without conscripts and with an elite officer class." The British anthors report "the simple truth that the Argentine army had no conception of how to fight a war against a major enemy." And they add them to rely too heavily on weapons and advanced equipment and not enough on fieldcraft and enterprise.

This is a lesson other third-world countries should pender. The acquisition of advanced technology cannot insure victory unless it is accompanied by extensive and intensive training.

The reader seeking a more magisterial view of the Falklands will find it in the fourth chapter of the report written by the committee appointed by the Tory government and headed by Lord Franks. But the last few sentences of the book will serve as well:

"This was a war which the British people should ant have had to fight. Yet after so many years of what seemed like national failure and decline, they were confronted with a disaster they still had the strength to rectify. They were reassured by the way the services performed. They were pleased that a job that had the before my done for mell. that had to be done was done so well. They feit justified in a renewed national pride and self-confi-

Future Is Now For Arias at 18

By Jane Leavy

WASHINGTON — Tony Arias sat in the stands trying to sound stern. "I think he peaked at 12," he said, watching his son, the tennis player, who is 18 and ranked 11th in the world. "Aw," Jimmy Arias said later, "he always says

One day, when Jimmy Arias was 12, Rod Laver came to the United States. Arias, who grew up near Buffalo, New York, was the U.S. 12-and-under

"They called Jimmy to practice with him," Tony Aries said. "All the people said. We want a set. We

"So they played a set. Lawer had to struggle to win, 7-5. That's how good he was when he was 12,"

"I just remember I probably played as well that match as I could play right now," Jimmy Arias said Thursday after heating John Mattke, 6-2, 6-4, in 63 minutes at a Grand Prix tournament here. "It was almost scary. I was serving and volleying and serving accs. I was doing things I can't do now. I almost won.

"It was 2-0, mine. He holds up the balls and says, "You're not going to win another game.' I'm kind of psyched out so I don't play that well for the next three games and he's up, 3-2," Arias said.

"Then I start playing great again and I get it to 5-all. He holds. At 6-5, I've been serving so hard, I like threw my shoulder out. I just couldn't serve anymore. I lost it on a dence game."

He alanced at his father. "You said 'You played fair, you lost, though." "You said, "You played "No," his father said. "I said, "You played good."

"Two years later you said, 'You played good.'"

And what did Laver say? "He said, 'It's much too early to tell whether he's going to be any good," Tony Arias said with a bint of vindication. ft is no longer too early to tell about Jimmy Arias, who is the No. 2 seed here. That set against Rod Lever six years ago may have given Arias an insight into his future, but it was a semifinal match here last year against José-Luis Clerc that told him the future was now. The newspaper clippings are home framed on the wall; the memory he keeps with him. Arias was unseeded, ranked 79th in the world. Clerc had won two consecutive tournaments and was ranked fifth.

Arias beat him with a forehand that, he says, is pretty violent; a willingness to chase down every possibility and a little wood shot that gave him match point.

"I remember talking to somebody at the beginning of the week and saying, 'I always win my first-round match but I never get any further. If I can just get one big tournament, one big week, then I'll be all set. I won't choke against the big names.' As soon as I won it, I said, 'This is it.' "

He reached the finals of the U.S. Open Clay

Courts, gave Jimmy Connors a tough four-set match at the U.S. Open and then won his first Grand Prix tournament in Tokyo. He was also experimenting with a new midsize racket, thanks to a new contract with Donnay. He had been playing with a standard size Wilson since he was 5. The new racket, which he used in two tournaments, helped his serve and his volley, he

"It was much against his father's and my wishes," said his coach, Nick Bollettieri. "He had to try to adjust his swing to his racket. Mr. Arias spent years to develop his racket to his swing. There were four months of complete chaos. He was down in ngh his son often vomited before matches. He asked Bollettieri to come to Italy.

"He's great for my confidence," Arias said. "In a way, he's the opposite of Dad. Dad tells me all the things I'm doing wrong. Nick tells me what I'm doing right. I've got the perfect group there." He won Florence and then he won the Italian

It wasn't the only injury he got in Paris, He lost to Guillermo Vilas in the fourth round of the French Open, playing with a pulled stomach mus-cle that he hurt in the second round. The injury forced him to withdraw from Wimbledon.

Although he says the injury did not hurt last week when he lost in the final in Boston to Clerc, it was bothering him here. All but a few of his serves Thursday were "alow poopers." He iced it and had ultrasound treatments after the match.

His father says Arias does not work as hard as he d-to. Eric Korite, who also trains with Bollettieri and grew up playing against him, said, "He hates to lose. He never tanks a set in practice." "I don't understand why everyone's not like nat," Arias said. "My little brother who plays the dumps, discouraged."

Confidence was never something Arias lacked.
"He was not humble," his father said, although

The Gentrification of Country Music

By John Rockwell

New York Times Service

EW YORK - The term N"country music" might seem clear enough. It means music from the country, as opposed to the city, and more particularly from white people who live in the rural American Southeast. As such, it was long disparaged by big-city sophisticates who found it simpleminded or funny, or it was ignored altogether. But country music is everywhere these days, and musically more vital than ever. So in an attempt to come to terms with where the style stands, I have made a random sampling of currently popular country music by ing the top 10 country albums in Billboard magazine, with a sidelong glance at popular country singles. The overall conclusion is that country music is divided between an old guard and a new guard except that the nld guard might at first sound newer, and the new guard attains its novelty by a paradoxical return to the music's rural roots.

Sociologically speaking, mainstream country music these days is hardly confined to the country or to the Southeast. Almost any-where you look in the United States, you will find a bar that advertises live country music on weekends. Nearly every big city boasts a country radio station and a country nightchib or twn.

Given the difficulty of defining which artists count as "country today, about the best statistic that the Country Music Association in Nashville, Tennessee, can provide to dramatize the rise of interest in the style involves radio stations. In 1961, according to association figures, there were 81 radio stations in the United States devoted to country music, nearly all in the Southeast. In 1982, there were 2,014, spread all over the nation.

Mainstream country music the "old guard" of my dichotomy -seems to represent the upward social aspirations of a once unqualifiedly unsophisticated class. The audience for country music used to be farmers and smalltown folk with only a distant connection to big-city life. Now, in part because the audience itself has spread to more affluent sections of the country, the standard of living of the country-music andience has risen.

This urbanization and gentrification of country music is usually linked with the rise of Nashville as the center of mainstream counmusic. This centricity came about through the dominance of the Grand Ole Opry radio network and the concentration since World War II of the country record and publishing industries in Nashville. Stylistically, the Nashville sound" has meant the softening of older-style country-folk music with strings and other city-slicker touches. Here is the LP list as it appeared in Billboard for July 16: 1. Alabama, "The Closer You Get"; 2. Ronnie Milsap, "Keyed Up"; 3. Merie Haggard and Willie Nelson, "Poncho and Lefty"; 4. Willie Nelson with Waylon Jennings, "Take It to the Limit";

5. Willie Nelson, "Tougher than Leather"; 6. The Oak Ridge Boys, "American Made"; 7. Lee Greenwood, "Somebody's Gonna Love"; 8. George Jones, "Shine On"; 9. Shelly West, "West by West"; 10. Kenny Rogers, "We've Got Tonight."

Ronnie Milsap to the Oak Ridge Boys to Lee Greenwood to George Iones (who towers above the rest as a singer) to Kenny Rogers, this is music with a calculated intent to jerk tears.

Country music of this sort is a seon-lit terrain of heartbreak and drunken carousing. The "road songs" that were popular during the CB radio craze may have abated, but the melodramatic image of a latter-day cowboy, alone against the world and guarding his innocence in the face of heartless women, a cruel world and his Shelly West is the only woman in the current top 10 is an accident; usually there are more. But West admirably epitomizes the female stereotypes that predominate in country music. She alternates between cheery uptempo songs glo-rifying the good times in bars (her hit is called "José Cuervo") and tough but submissive ballads.

Mainstream country music blending imperceptibly into what is called "middle of the road," has become the successor to the ballads of pre-rock Tin Pan Alley as the principal source of "easy listening" for American adults. Ig-nored even by most jazz and rock critics, country has been allowed to continue as a purely popular entertainment, almost entirely unfettered by self-conciousness. Its innocence has been preserved -along with, to be sure, an inescanable naivité.

But with the naivité comes an unfortunate aura of calculation and cynicism - as if the singers or their producers were very carefully crafting just what they thought the public might accept, rather than attempting to express themselves through their music. Part of the problem is the reliance most country singers place on their producers, who pick repertory and shape arrangements and the bectic recording schedule favored in Nashville. In country music, a business situation akin to Perhaps the most pervasive that of the 1940s and '50s pre-characteristic of the Nashville-vails. With managers and produc-

mainstream part of this list is the can calling the shots, artists crank prevalence of drippily sentimental ballads. From Alabama to three a year. The practice almost assures the continuance of what Nashville likes to think of as "tradition," but what really amounts to deadening repetition.

Country music used to be called "country and Western," lumping Appalachian folk music together with cowboy ballads. If Nashville's country music answers the needs of cowboy-Western mythology, it does so in faint imitation of the first and still most commercially potent wave of the reformist new guard of country music, which came out of Texas a decade ago. The leader of that movement is

In country's cowboy world, the role of the woman has always been ambivalent. The fact that Shelly West is the combon to the state of th not unprecedented. Along with Jennings, and allied with Hag-gard, Nelson led the fight to toughen up country, to bring it simultaneously closer to rock and to a purer, pre-Nashville style of country folk. (Dolly Parton's lat-est LP, "Burlap and Satin," should also be mentioned here. It is about to enter the top 10, is Parton's best, most country-on ented disk in years, and contains a haunting duet with Nelson.)

The success of the Texas "outlaws" was salutary for a country mainstream that had been threat-ening to lose most of its flavorful distinctiveness. Of Nelson's three LPs in the top 5, the closest to mainstream country is his duet disk with Haggard, but even it retains a knotty integrity that the records of Milsap, Rogers and Greenwood don't even hint at. The album with Jennings comes closest to rock on this list, and it is appealingly done.

"Tougher Than Leather" is the most unusual of the three, but a disappointment. Fight years ago, Nelson released an album called "Red Headed Stranger" that raised "country music" to a new level. A gripping cycle of original songs mixed with traditional ballads, the LP told a tale and did so in a way that suggested at the very least a rock "concept album," and more deeply an art-song cycle. This new disk attempts to repeat that success, but the tale is less moving and the songs less timeful. If Nelson and his Texans reprosented the first wave of country's reform movement, the circle of Emmylou Harris and Ricky Skaggs counts as country's "new wave." Harris doesn't happen to have a disk in the top 10 just now, but she and her producer-husband, Brian Ahem, remain central to this movement. Based originally in Virginia, the home of a thriving bluegrass scene, Harris moved to Los Angeles, played a key role in the country-rock fusion led by the late Gram Parsons. then struck out on her own.

Through her own records and the encouragement she provides to band members and other singers, Harris has helped revitalize a whole tradition of country music that avoids both the fake-sophisticated glitter of Nashville and the gruff manliness of Texas.

Skaggs has the No. 11 album in the Billboard chart, "Highways and Heartaches" (Epic). He also has the No. 4 country single — No. 1 the week before — "High-way 40 Blues." Best of all, he is the producer of another LP, "Old Familiar Feeling" by The Whites (Warner-Curb). This is rapidly climbing the LP chart, boasts the No. 9 single ("I Wonder Who's Holding My Baby Tonight") and is the best disk discussed in this the wreckage of his Belfast home after Irish Republican Army supporters torched it. Now the former member of Parliament, a Catholic and lifelong Socialist, he has been made a peer of the realm for his crusade to bring Northern Ireland's fending Protestants and Roman Catholics together. Seventeen British politicians, including a former prime minister, Sir Harold Wilson, were named life peers and may serve in the House of Lords. All 17 men — nine Laborites, six Conservatives, one Liberal and Fitt - lost their House of Commons seats in the general cicotions June 9, or stepped down. ... House of Lords is limited to amendmouse or Large is minion to anothering and delaying legislation. The list, amounced by the offfice of Prizac Minister Mangaret Thatcher, was a setback for the Labor Party leader Michael Foot, who had asked for the appointment of 27 Labor peers after his party lost the election. The honors list also conferred five knighthoods mon Conservatives, including Humparey Addins, a former Norman me-land secretary who resigned from the Foreign Office along with Lord Car-rington after Argentina invaded the Falldand Islands. rey Atkins, a former Northern Ire-

The American actress Jessica Lange shared the prize for best actress with Judy Davis of Australia at Moscow's International Film Festival Lange won for her performance m "Frances" and Davis for "Winter of Our Dreams." Tass said the prize for best actor was split between Poland's Wirgiliusz Gryn for "Pastorale Heroica" and Yoshi Kato of Japan for "Home Village." The Moroccan film "Amoc," directed by Sorbes Ben Berks, Miguel Littin's Nicara-guan film "Alcion and the Condor": and a Soviet movie, "Vassa," took honors for best film.

The actress Carroll Baker, who rose to fame in 1956 in "Baby Doll" and "Giant," has married for the third time, her London agent announced. But the London wedding was more than 16 months ago - on March 10, 1982 - and had been kept quiet until now. Baker, 52, whose autobiography, "Baby Doll," is to be published in October, married the British television actor Donald Bur
